Upon entering this town through the "tunnel of trees", one can reminisce back to a simpler time. The hustle and bustle of a growing urban Sacramento is left behind as one takes the short drive south toward the Delta river country. The town of Freeport was established in 1862 by the Freeport Railroad Company. Sacramento had established a tax on goods entering its port. Enterprising men of commerce reasoned that they could bypass Sacramento and establish a "free" port just south of town.

They then built a railroad to Folsom to ship their goods, tariff free, around Sacramento. Thus, the town of Freeport became a shipping center and grew rapidly by 1863. Three or four hundred people lived here and the community thrived. The goods passing through Freeport were destined for the mines of Northern California. Eventually, the railroad proved a failure and the town decreased to about its present size.

This serene small town setting is currently becoming a center of Delta recreation. Fishing, boating, cycling and golf are activities that bring folks to the town today. The Landeros family welcomes you to this friendly little community and we hope that you enjoy your visit. We welcome you to Freeport, "Gateway to the Delta." Please enjoy our hospitality.
